NEW DIRECTIONS IN CIA'S SUPPORT OF U.S. INTERNATIONAL ECONOMIC POLICY

The Office of Training and Office of Economic Research have arranged a seminar on the new directions in CIA's economic intelligence effort in support of U.S. international economic policy. The purpose of this Seminar is to provide an orientation for collection officers, research analysts outside OER who deal with economic intelligence as part of their work, and officers in elements which support production.

The President's Foreign Intelligence Advisory Board, in a July 1971 memorandum, requested the Director of Central Intelligence to give increased priority to production of finished intelligence on international economic affairs. This memo came at a time when the value of the U.S. dollar was falling in world money markets, and shortly before President Nixon announced Phase I of his economic program. As a result of these and other developments, the Office of Economic Research has received an increasing number of requests to produce studies on subjects bearing on U.S. international economic policies. Many of these requests have been levied by the President's Council on International Economic Policy. The impact of this changing situation in production of economic intelligence is being felt by collectors, processors, and research offices in many parts of the Intelligence Community.
